Dear DOJ,

Having lived through the debacle of the AT&T trial and the IBM trial, it seems to me that the case against Microsoft is weak, fostered by competing firms whose products were not of equal value and whose sales and marketing personnel were weak. In short, the competition to Microsoft did not have what it takes to succeed. Were it not for Senator Orin Hatch, I doubt that the case would have been launched. I discussed the merits of the Microsoft case with an attorney employed by a dot com company. I reflected upon the fact that each allegation against Microsoft is something I experienced in 35 years of employment in financial services. His reply was "Microsoft got big doing it, therefore the case. If Microsoft had not become successful, no case." That seems to me to be unequal protection or administration of the law. The case should be closed promptly.

Sincerely yours,
